Environmental Health Australia (EHA) is delighted to welcome all delegates to the 14th National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Environmental Health Conference in Melbourne, Victoria. Firstly, I would like to acknowledge the Traditional Owners of the land on which the conference will be held, the Wurundjeri Woi-wurrung and Bunurong Boon Wurrung peoples of the Eastern Kulin and I also acknowledge the various lands from which delegates will have travelled from across Australia to be at this event, and I pay my respects to Elders past, present and emerging.

EHA is the premier organisation in Australia advocating for environmental health and representing the professional interests of all environmental health practitioners. EHA believes access to training, mentorship, coaching and association with other environmental health practitioners will benefit all Environmental Health Workers (EHWs). Our network of State Associations can offer EHWs personal or corporate memberships that enable access to a network of professionals, training and conference opportunities, environmental health products and advocacy, across Australia.

The Conference theme “Urban, regional, remote: healthy environments, healthy country, healthy people” highlights the variety of issues and challenges and varied approaches being utilised to move communities to better environmental health outcomes. EHA is pleased to be connecting environmental health workers across Australia for this great networking opportunity, working together to progress Aboriginal environmental health priorities.
